PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF APPEALS, STATE OF ARIZONA, DIVISION ONE

Now Comes the State of Arizona, by Herbert E. Williams, Deputy Maricopa County Attorney, and Michael D. Jones, Special Deputy Maricopa County Attorney, and prays that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment of the Court of Appeals of the State of Arizona, Division One, entered in the above-entitled cause on December 28, 1982, Petition for Review denied by the Arizona Supreme Court on March 29, 1983.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Arizona Court of Appeals, Division One, is reported at _____ Ariz. _____, 661 P.2d 1138, and is appended as Exhibit A. The order denying the Motion for Rehearing is appended as Exhibit B. The order denying the Petition for Review is appended as Exhibit C. The Superior Court's order granting defendant's Motion to Suppress is appended as Exhibit D.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The constitutional issue was raised in the Superior Court of Maricopa County by Motion to Suppress. The Superior Court is the trial court. The Court ordered all evidence suppressed on August 14, 1980. (Appendix D)

The State of Arizona filed its timely appeal to the Arizona Court of Appeals, Division One and judgment on that appeal was entered December 28, 1982. (Appendix A) The state moved for a rehearing which was denied on February 28, 1983 (Appendix B)

A timely petition for review to the Arizona Supreme Court was filed. It was denied on March 30, 1983. (Appendix C)

This petition was filed within 60 days thereof.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 1257(3).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

The Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in pertinent part:

> In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusations; to be confronted with the witnesses against him....

The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in pertinent part:

> ...No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law....

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Respondent, Richard F. Young, was charged with the crime of First Degree Murder. Young was the bartender in a Phoenix bar called The Leprechaun Lounge when, during the evening hours of October 26, 1978, Young and a customer, Don Jason, became involved in an argument. The men engaged in a fight that was broken up by a barmaid, Diana Armstrong. After the fight, Young walked behind the bar and removed a gun from the cash register. Young fired a shot that struck Jason in the chest. Jason fell and attempted to crawl into a restroom. Young's second shot caught Jason in the back.

Grace Gillespie was the owner of the Leprechaun Lounge; she and Richard F. Young were dating. The Phoenix police were called because Mrs. Gillespie wanted them there as quickly as possible. The police arrived at approximately 11:00 p.m.

The murder weapon was found in the ceiling of the Leprechaun Lounge, hidden by a movable section of the ceiling tile. Detective Ron Quaife of the Phoenix Police Department observed a piece of handkerchief hanging from the edge of the ceiling tile, and he noticed that the ceiling tile itself was not in place. The gun was found wrapped in the handkerchief. The trial court granted a Motion to Suppress all tangible evidence seized at the scene of the crime because the Phoenix Police Department had failed to obtain a search warrant. The physical evidence suppressed included the gun, the handkerchief wrapped around the gun, two shell casings from the murder weapon, and numerous photographs of the murder scene, all found or taken in the public area of the bar.

The trial court also granted a Motion to Suppress portions of Diana Armstrong's testimony that were recalled as a result of a hypnosis session. Subsequent to the homicide on October 26, 1978, Ms. Armstrong made eight statements, the last one, on November 21, 1978, under the influence of hypnosis. The hypnosis session was conducted by a specially trained police officer and the entire hypnosis session was videotaped. Hypnosis was successful in allowing Ms. Armstrong to relax and recall details that she had never recalled previously: (1) Richard Young had initiated the confrontation between himself and Don Jason by pointing his finger in Jason's face; (2) Jason was not moving towards Young at the time he was first shot; (3) after shooting Jason, Young dipped the gun in water and wiped it clean with a bar rag; (4) Young made the statement, "Sid got away with it, why can't I?"; (5) Young made the statement, "Nobody beats my ass." The trial court had previously noted that most of the information elicited from Ms. Armstrong while under hypnosis could be corroborated by comparison with her previous seven pre-hypnosis statements. And, most of the "new" information elicited had never been the subject of close interrogation previously, or the "new" information clarified previous statements made by Ms. Armstrong. Additionally, the trial court noted that statements by Grace Gillespie corroborated some of the new information obtained from Diana Armstrong under hypnosis.

In an opinion filed on December 28, 1982, and attached as Exhibit A, the Arizona Court of Appeals affirmed the trial court's order suppressing all evidence seized at the Leprechaun Lounge except photographs, which the Court held to be admissible subject to the satisfaction of normal foundational prerequisites. The Court of Appeals also ruled that Diana Armstrong would not be permitted to testify about those matters recalled during hypnosis, and her testimony must be limited to those matters recalled and related prior to hypnosis.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I

HYPNOSIS DOES NOT RENDER A WITNESS INCOMPETENT TO TESTIFY ABOUT MATTERS RECALLED DURING A HYPNOSIS SESSION.

Hypnosis is a valuable tool to law enforcement in enhancing or retrieving lost memories of traumatized witnesses. Respondent has admitted this. In fact, both Respondent's expert and the expert called by the State of Arizona agree that hypnosis can be an effective aid to recall. And, of course it is well recognized in the scientific community that hypnosis is an effective aid to memory recall. Kroger and Douce, Hypnosis and Criminal Investigation, 27 INT.J.CLIN.EXP.HYPN. 358-74 (1979); L. LECRON, INTRODUCTION TO EXPERIMENTAL HYPNOSIS (1965); Rosenthal, Hypnotic Recall of Material Learned Under Anxiety and Non-Anxiety Producing Conditions, 34 EXPER.PSYCHOLOGY, 369-89 (1944); Schafer and Rubio, Hypnosis to Aid the Recall of Witnesses, 26 INT.J.CLIN.EXP.HYPN. 81-91 (1978); Stalnaker and Riddle, The Effect of Hypnosis on Long Delayed Recall, 6 GEN.PSYCH. 429-40 (1932). See NOYES AND KLOB, MODERN CLINICAL PSYCHIATRY, 603 (1973); WOLBERG, AMERICAN HANDBOOK OF PSYCHIATRY, Chapter 12 (Artieti Ed. 1974); H. Spiegel, Hypnosis: An Adjunct to Psychotherapy, COMPREHENSIVE TEXTBOOK OF PSYCHIATRY, Section 34.34 (Freedman and Caplan, Eds. 1967), as cited in People v. Smrekar, 358 N.E.2d 848, 853 (Illinois, 1979).

Hypnosis is effective because the subject remembers details that were blocked out due to the stress or trauma of a crime situation. This is so, because, in a traumatic situation, the subject focuses his or her attention on the incidents most threatening to themselves, and details or peripheral incidents, although seen, are often overshadowed by more violent recollections. And, many times, the subject is afraid to remember those violent recollections. Thus, through relaxation, and viewing the event as though on a television screen, hypnosis acts as an aid to a recall of those peripheral incidents that may be significant to law enforcement.

Hypnosis is an altered state of consciousness. But hypnosis is not an unnatural process: sleep, daydreaming, and momentary periods of inattention are also altered states of consciousness. Hypnosis is characterized by a mental state of concentration and a physical state of relaxation. During hypnosis a subject does not do anything that he or she would not normally want to do. In fact, the subject is aware of everything that is happening during hypnosis, and can come out of the state anytime he or she wants to. A subject is not controlled in any sense of the word, even though the subject is susceptible to increased suggestions. People may confabulate, or fill in the blanks of their memory with fantasies, if they are motivated to do it in hypnosis. People may lie or distort facts while under hypnosis. A subject may do, think, recall, or say anything in hypnosis, just as in the "normal" waking state. So, hypnosis must never be confused with the so-called truth determinants, such as the polygraph or truth serums.

In ruling that Diana Armstrong could not testify about matters recalled during hypnosis, and that her testimony would be limited to matters recalled and related prior to hypnosis, the Arizona Court of Appeals followed the rule set forth by the Arizona Supreme Court in State ex. rel. Collins v. Superior Court, 132 Ariz. 180, 644 P.2d 1266 (1982). In that case the Arizona Supreme Court applied a per se rule of inadmissibility concerning any hypnosis-developed statements because of the "inherent unreliability of the hypnosis process". A strongly divided Arizona Supreme Court has persisted in ignoring the scientific evidence and authorities who approve of the use of investigative hypnosis and have proposed guidelines for its use. Following an overabundance of caution, the Arizona Supreme Court fears that a witness' memory may be unalterably changed, or strengthened, so as to deny a defendant in a criminal trial his constitutional right of confrontation. The Court has ignored authorities who point out that the likelihood of this occurring during hypnosis is no greater than what might occur as a result of a normal interview situation, or a deposition. In fact, there is only one scientific authority that may be discovered in the scientific literature that would endorse such an absurd proposition.

The facts of the instant case show that a complete record of the hypnosis session was made by videotaping from beginning to end. This videotape was made available to Respondent Young and his attorneys. The questions of unnecessary suggestions, or prompting, during the hypnosis session, if any at all occurred, was available for any and all to observe on the videotape. The issue of improper suggestion was the subject of a lengthy hearing conducted by the trial court in which many expert witnesses testified after viewing the videotape. Dr. Martin Orne, testifying for Respondent, admitted that hypnosis has a place in the criminal investigation process, citing the example in ChowChilla, California, in which a school bus was hijacked, the children and bus driver kidnapped and buried for a lengthy period of time. In that case hypnosis successfully assisted the bus driver to remember the license plate number of a van driven by the kidnappers. Dr. Orne also testified about his proposed guidelines for the use of investigative hypnosis, and the trial court concluded that the State of Arizona had substantially complied with those procedures.

In conclusion, it is respectfully submitted that the Arizona Court of Appeals and the Arizona Supreme Court has committed a grave error concerning the reliability of the hypnosis process. The misconceptions concerning hypnosis as magic, or form of entertainment, must be disassociated from its use in the instant case as a technique to assist a witness in recalling details surrounding a crime. Respondent Young will not be denied his Sixth Amendment right to confrontation of witnesses if Diana Armstrong would be permitted to testify about matters recalled during the hypnosis session, because that session was videotaped, and is presently available for use by Young for cross examination purposes.

MINCEY V. ARIZONA, 437 U.S. 385 (1978), DOES NOT REQUIRE THE SUPPRESSION OF ALL TANGIBLE EVIDENCE SEIZED FROM A MURDER SCENE (A PUBLIC BAR) WHERE A STATE DEFENDANT WHO IS AN EMPLOYEE IN THE BAR FAILS TO SATISFY HIS BURDEN OF PROOF THAT HE POSSESSED A REASONABLE EXPECTATION OF PRIVACY IN THE PREMISES SEARCHED.

The Arizona Court of Appeals has mistakenly extended the rule promulgated by this Court in Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978), to confer standing upon an employee to object to warrantless searches and seizures made in area open to the public where the police had been summoned at the request of the bar's owner. Presumably, the Arizona Court has failed to understand the distinction between a search and seizure that lasts for many days after an unannounced police entry into an individual's dwelling, and the typical homicide investigation where the police are summoned to enter a dwelling or business under emergency circumstances.

A. Property owner's consent to a search and seizure may be presumed where such owner requests the police to enter and conduct an investigation.

When Grace Gillespie requested the police to come to her bar, the Leprechaun Lounge, after Don Jason's shooting, she not only consented to their entrance onto those premises, but she impliedly gave her consent to their investigation. Having been called to the Leprechaun Lounge, the Phoenix Police Department was legitimately on the premises. Mrs. Gillespie admitted that she did indeed want the police to come inside the bar; in fact she wanted them to come there as soon as possible. Mrs. Gillespie never objected to the scope or the duration of the Phoenix Police Department's search of the Leprechaun Lounge.

It should be unnecessary for an investigating officer to request permission from the owner of premises searched to continue an investigation that was commenced at the behest of such owner. So, unlike the situation in Mincey v. Arizona, supra, the initial intrusion into the premises later searched was not based upon an emergency situation, but rather commenced on invitation by the property owner.

Richard F. Young, the bartender at the Leprechaun Lounge, did not have a sufficient interest in the premises searched so as to validly assert an objection to that search and seizure. In Mancusi v. DeForte, 392 U.S. 364 (1968), this Court determined that an employee of a union who shared an office with other employees did have a sufficient expectation of privacy so as to validly object to a search of his office. However, the area in the instant case that was searched was not Young's office or an office that he shared with other employees. The search took place in a public area of the Leprechaun Lounge. The place where Young hid the gun was not even an area of his own domain, such as behind the bar itself, or a personal locker or closet. The searched areas were places of public domain in which Young could not have reasonably expected the degree of privacy he now claims.

The Arizona Court of Appeals noted that ownership is a factor to be considered in determining interest in premises searched. (See Appendix A, at 9.) However, Richard F. Young was not an owner of the Leprechaun Lounge. In his testimony Richard Young admitted that he was not a "hidden owner", and that he only had a "verbal agreement" to take over the bar from Mrs. Gillespie "after it got out of the red". Of Young's proprietary interest in the bar the Arizona Court noted: "Both Mrs. Gillespie and the Defendant testified that at some time in the future the Defendant might take over the business and the lease." (See Appendix A, at 8-9). Expectations of possible property interest do not confer present proprietary status so as to enable Richard F. Young to object to the search of the premises of the Leprechaun Lounge.

The mere fact that Richard F. Young was the boyfriend of Grace Gillespie, the married owner of the Leprechaun Lounge, is of no moment. Sexual relationships do not confer proprietary interests.

Richard F. Young possessed no legitimate expectation of privacy in the ceiling tiles he used to conceal the murder weapon wrapped in a handkerchief. Young admitted that he hid the gun in the ceiling after he became excited. He did not testify that he regularly used the ceiling to conceal his personal effects, and no evidence was presented that he had been given permission on that occasion by the bar's owner to use the ceiling. Where a person's only intent is to hide incriminating evidence, any expectation of privacy that such evidence will not be discovered by the police is not "legitimate." In Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128 (1978), this Court recognized the principle that a subjective expectation of not being discovered by the police is not a legitimate expectation of privacy entitled to Fourth Amendment protection:

> Obviously, however, a "legitimate" expectation of privacy by definition means more than a subjective expectation of not being discovered. A burglar plying his trade in a summer cabin during the off season may have a thoroughly justified subjective expectation of privacy, but it is not one that the law recognizes as "legitimate." His presence, in the words of Jones, 362 U.S. at 267, 80 S.Ct. at 734, is "wrongful"; his expectation is not "one that society is prepared to recognize as reasonable." (citations omitted)

439 U.S. 143, Note 12.

Petitioner respectfully requests that its Petition for a Writ of Certiorari be granted to correct the erroneous extension of Fourth Amendment principles enunciated by this Court in Mincey v. Arizona, supra, and the concept of reasonable expectation of privacy enunciated in Rakas v. Illinois, supra.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that for the reasons outlined above plenary review should be granted.

IN THE COURT OF APPEALS
STATE OF ARIZONA
DIVISION ONE

Opinion of the Arizona Court of Appeals, Division One

STATE OF ARIZONA,

Appellant,

vs.

RICHARD F. YOUNG,

Appellee.

An Appeal from the Superior Court of Maricopa County
Cause No. CR-106652
Filed: December 28, 1982 Glen D. Clark, Clerk
1 CA-CR 4956 Department B

Grant, Judge: —

Before The Honorable Rufus C. Coulter, Jr., Judge*

* The Honorable Richard M. Davis, a Judge pro tempore of a court of record, has been authorized to participate in this matter by the Chief Justice of the Arizona Supreme Court, pursuant to Arizona Const. art. VI, § 20.

This is an appeal by the State of Arizona from two pretrial orders entered by the trial court. The first order precluded the state's primary witness to the homicide from testifying because she had been placed under hypnosis. The second order granted the motion of defendant to suppress all evidence found at the scene of the homicide other than the victim's body.

The facts leading to defendant's indictment for first degree murder reflect that on the evening of October 26, 1978, the defendant and the victim, Donald Jason, engaged in a physical fight in the Leprechaun Lounge in Phoenix, Arizona. The fight stopped when a barmaid, Diana Armstrong, threatened to call the police. Defendant, who was the head bartender, walked behind the bar, took out a pistol and shot the victim in the chest. When the victim turned and staggered towards a restroom, the defendant fired a second shot into the victim's back. The victim fell to the floor fatally wounded.

The owner of the bar, Grace Gillespie, called the police and reported the shooting. Before the police arrived, the defendant wrapped the pistol in a handkerchief and hid it behind a tile of the bar's dropped ceiling. Two police officers arrived a few minutes later, secured the scene and waited until homicide detectives arrived before gathering any physical evidence.

Approximately one hour after the scene was secured, homicide detectives conducted a search of the bar and took photographs of the scene. When one of the officers noticed a portion of a handkerchief hanging down from the ceiling, he moved the ceiling tile and retrieved the hidden pistol.

Subsequent to the homicide, Diana Armstrong made eight separate statements including one on November 21, 1978, when she was placed under hypnosis by a police detective trained in the use of hypnosis. Prior to trial the defendant filed a motion in limine seeking to preclude the state from calling Diana Armstrong as a witness at trial because of the potential taint resulting from the hypnosis. The trial court granted the motion based upon State v. La Mountain, 125 Ariz. 547, 611 P.2d 551 (1980).

The defendant also filed a pretrial motion to suppress the pistol, the handkerchief, shell casings and photographs taken at the scene on the ground that no search warrant had been obtained after the homicide scene was secured as required by Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 98 S.Ct. 2408, 57 L.Ed.2d 290 (1978). The state responded that the motion to suppress was untimely filed, that the search was conducted pursuant to the owner's consent and that the defendant suffered no personal fourth amendment violaton as required by Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128, 99 S.Ct. 421, 58 L.Ed.2d 387 (1978). The trial court found that the state had not met its burden of showing that the search was lawful and therefore granted the defendant's motion to suppress.

I. HYPNOSIS ISSUE

The state's first argument on appeal requests this court to limit the cases of State v. La Mountain, supra, and State v. Mena, 128 Ariz. 226, 624 P.2d 1274 (1981) to their facts and not adopt a per se rule precluding a witness from testifying after hypnosis has been used to refresh the witness's memory. At the time of the hearing below, the only Arizona Supreme Court opinion dealing with hypnosis was State v. La Mountain. In that case the supreme court stated:

> Although we perceive that hypnosis is a useful tool in the investigative stage, we do not feel the state of the science (or art) has been shown to be such as to admit testimony which may have been developed as a result of hypnosis. A witness who has been under hypnosis, as in the case here, should not be allowed to testify when there is a question that the testimony may have been produced by that hypnosis.

125 Ariz. at 551, 611 P.2d at 555. The supreme court held in La Mountain, however, that the admission of hypnotically-refreshed testimony in that case was harmless because the evidence against the defendant was overwhelming. La Mountain thus did not require absolute preclusion of testimony by witnesses who had been hypnotized as that rule was subsequently set forth in State v. Mena, supra, nor did it follow the modified rule as set forth in State ex rel. Collins v. Superior Court, 132 Ariz. 180, 644 P.2d 1266 (1982) (supplemental opinion filed May 4, 1982).[1] In Collins II the Arizona Supreme Court relaxed the rule of absolute preclusion of hypnotized witnesses' testimony enunciated in Mena and Collins I, to allow a previously hypnotized witness to testify to the extent of his pre-hypnotic recall, provided that this pre-hypnotic recall had been appropriately recorded before hypnosis, and the hypnosis procedures were performed in a manner designed to minimize the danger of contamination of both pre-hypnotic and post-hypnotic recall.

1. The original Collins opinion will be hereafter referred to as "Collins I", and the supplemental opinion as "Collins II."

We must consider then whether the law on hypnotic testimony as developed in Mena and Collins I and II should be applied to this case. In addressing the retroactivity question in Collins I the supreme court held as follows:

> We hold that any person hypnotized post-Mena is incompetent to testify. Any person hypnotized pre-Mena but who testified post-Mena or who has not yet testified is incompetent to testify. We further hold that any conviction presently in the appeals process in which there was hypnotically recalled testimony and where the testimony and hypnosis took place pre-Mena will be examined on a case-by-case basis to determine if there was sufficient evidence, excluding the tainted testimony, to uphold the conviction. In other words, the question in these cases is whether the introduction of posthypnotic testimony was harmless error.

132 Ariz. at 190, 644 P. 2d at 1276. In this case, the hypnosis took place pre-Mena, and the witness has not yet testified. Therefore, it appears that Collins I would require that the witness be precluded from testifying.

The issue, however, is further complicated when the supreme court's subsequent decision in Collins II is considered. Surprisingly, the opinion in Collins II, unlike Collins I, completely omits any discussion of whether Collins II is to be given limited retroactive application.

In his dissent in Collins II, Justice Gordon "[presumes] because the majority failed to address the prospective/retrospective application of the rule it sets today that the holding is prospective only," citing his discussion of this question in the majority opinion in Collins I. We assume that by this comment Justice Gordon is suggesting that the prospective/retrospective line drawing be done in accordance with the above-quoted guidelines which he developed in Collins I and which he recognized as "not purely prospective." In our opinion these guidelines might more properly be characterized as contemplating the application of a limited retroactive standard. Thus, the application of Collins I would be prospective only in the sense that it would not be applied so as to invalidate convictions which have become final. On the other hand, it would apply to convictions which have not become final because of pending appeals. To that extent it would be given a limited retroactive effect in accordance with the general rule that when there is a change of law by judicial decision between the time of trial and appeal, the appellate court will dispose of the appeal according to the law prevailing at the time of the appellate disposition. Arnold v. Knettle, 10 Ariz.App. 509, 460 P.2d 45 (1969).

From the foregoing we conclude that in this appeal we must review the record and apply the principles developed in Collins II.[2] Pursuant to Collins II, a hypnotized witness can testify to matters she was able to recall and relate to the authorities prior to hypnosis if the foundational requirements of Collins II have been established. In our opinion there is implicit in Collins II a requirement that the issue of admissibility of pre-hypnotic recall be presented to the trial court for determination prior to the admission of testimony.

2. Our conclusion in this regard is fortified by the Arizona Supreme Court's most recent opinions dealing with hypnosis issues, State v. Stolp, (No. 5397, filed June 2, 1982), and State v. Encinas, 132 Ariz. 493, 647 P.2d 624.

This issue has not yet been presented to the trial court. It is clear however that Collins II prohibits the introduction of statements made during or after hypnosis. In Collins II, the supreme court stated that failure to so limit the testimony of the hypnotized witness would be reversible error if prejudicial. Therefore, as to this issue the order of the trial court precluding Diana Armstrong from testifying as to matters contained in statements made during or post-hypnosis is affirmed. However, Diana Armstrong may testify to pre-hypnosis statements if the trial court determines such testimony meets the requirements set forth in Collins II as we have applied it to this case.

The defendant also claims that the state waived the right to appeal the hypnosis issue. We find no support in the record for this contention.

II. SEARCH ISSUE

The state's second argument is that the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress. The state argues that the motion to suppress was not filed within the time limits of rule 16.1(b), Rules of Criminal Procedure, that the warrantless search was authorized by the owner's consent and that the defendant suffered no personal fourth amendment violation.

Under Mincey v. Arizona, it is clear that once the homicide scene had been secured, the police were without authority to conduct a general search of the premises without a warrant absent either consent or some other recognized exception to the warrant clause of the fourth amendment. We agree with the trial court that the evidence does not support a finding that the owner, Grace Gillespie, consented to a wholesale search of the premises merely by calling the police to the homicide scene or because the bar was a public establishment. As stated in Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New

> The suggestion is that by virtue of its display of the items at issue to the general public in areas of its store open to them, petitioner had no legitimate expectation of privacy against a governmental intrusion, see Rakes v. Illinois, [citation omitted], and that accordingly no warrant was needed. But there is no basis for the notion that because a retail store invites the public to enter, it consents to wholesale searches and seizures that do not conform to Fourth Amendment guarantees.

See also Lewis v. United States, 385 U.S. 206, 87 S.Ct. 424, 17 L.Ed.2d 312 (1966). While Mrs. Gillespie consented to the initial entry, there is nothing to support an inference of consent to search the ceiling.

We agree with the trial court's obvious conclusion that the defendant had a legitimate expectation of privacy against governmental intrusion into the bar or the dropped ceiling. See Rakas v. Illinois, supra. In Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735, 99 S.Ct. 2577, 61 L.Ed.2d 220 (1979) the supreme court expanded on the reasonable expectation of privacy test announced in Rakas. The court stated that the test involves two questions. First, whether the individual, by his conduct, exhibited an actual (subjective) expectation of privacy. Second, whether the subjective expectation of privacy is one that society is prepared to recognize as reasonable, i.e., whether the subjective expectation, viewed objectively, is justifiable under the circumstances.

Here, the defendant exhibited an actual expectation of privacy by the very act of hiding the pistol in the ceiling. Viewed objectively we find that the expectation was justifiable under the circumstances. Both Mrs. Gillespie and the defendant testified that at some time in the future the defendant might take over the business and the lease. At the time of the shooting, defendant was acting as a manager or head bartender and shared control of the premises with Mrs. Gillespie. From the evidence presented the trial court could find that defendant owned the pistol and had a proprietary interest in the bar. Ownership is a strong factor to be considered. Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 100 S.Ct. 2556, 65 L.Ed.2d 633 (1980).

In a case quite similar on its facts the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit held that a warrantless search of the space above an open ceiling tile in the bathroom of a recently arrested drug suspect's motel room violated the suspect's fourth amendment rights. United States v. Irizarry, 673 F.2d 554 (1st Cir. 1982). It is clear in the instant case that the premises had been secured therefore no exigent circumstances existed, the gun was not in "plain view", and the state does not propose that this was a search incident to an arrest. The defendant had a legitimate expectation of privacy in the area searched and therefore the exclusionary rule was properly applied. We agree with the trial court that the state failed to offer evidence that any of the items seized were in plain view. Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 91 S.Ct. 2022, 29 L.Ed.2d 564 (1971). Therefore we have no choice but to affirm the suppression of all evidence seized. With regard to the photographs however, we note that they are generally admissible if the things which they depict may be testified to by a witness. In other words a witness may describe what he saw and illustrate his testimony with photographs. However, the photographs are not admissible by themselves as original or substitute evidence. 23 C.J.S. Criminal Law § 852, Viliborgh v. State, 45 Ariz. 275, 43

P.2d 210 (1935); State v. Snodgrass, 121 Ariz. 409, 590 P.2d 948 (App. 1979); State v. Kleier, 69 Idaho 278, 206 P.2d 513 (1949).

The state also claims that the motion to suppress was not timely filed. Rule 16.1, Arizona Rules of Criminal Procedure, provides in part:

> b. Making of Motions Before Trial. All motions shall be made no later than 20 days prior to the date set for trial. Lack of jurisdiction may be raised at any time.
> c. Effect of Failure to Make Motions in Timely Manner. Any motion, defense objection, or request not timely raised under Rule 16.1(b) shall be precluded, unless the basis therefore was not then known, and by the exercise of reasonable diligence could not then have been known, and the party raises it promptly upon learning of it.

The 20 day requirement in rule 16.1(b), Arizona Rules of Criminal Procedure, has been interpreted to mean that pretrial motions must be filed 20 days prior to the first trial date. State v. Superior Court (McKenzie), 127 Ariz. 175, 619 P.2d 3 (1980). The resetting of a trial date, pursuant to a continuance, does not change the date by which pretrial motions must be filed, unless the trial court so orders. Id.

Appellee was arraigned on May 7, 1979, and his trial date was set for June 21, 1979. The trial court's minute entry dated May 7, 1979, states that the deadline date for all motions was June 1, 1979. Appellee filed his motion to suppress on August 14, 1980, nearly 14 months after the original trial date.

However, the McKenzie opinion was not filed until October 7, 1980, almost two months later. Under the circumstances of this case and the inherent unfairness of applying McKenzie retroactively we conclude that the motion to suppress was timely filed under rule 16.1 as it was then construed. See State v. Post, 121 Ariz. 579, 592 P.2d 775 (1979); State v. Lee, 25 Ariz. App. 220, 542 P.2d 413 (1975).

The order granting appellee's motion in limine regarding testimony of Diana Armstrong is affirmed in part and remanded for further evidentiary hearing. The order granting appellee's motion to suppress is affirmed.

SARAH D. GRANT, Judge

CONCURRING:

EINO M. JACOBSON, Judge

DAVIS, Judge, pro tempore, dissenting in part.

I disagree with my colleagues' conclusion that the gun must be suppressed. In my view, the appellee did not carry the burden of showing that he had what used to be called "standing" and what is not referred to as a reasonable expectation of privacy in the ceiling of the bar, so as to entitle him to the protection of the Fourth Amendment.

Initially, I cannot suppress a comment upon the parties' arguments with respect to Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385, 98 S.Ct. 2408, 57 L.Ed.2d 290 (1978). Apart from the United States Supreme Court's rigid and broadly comprehensive per se rule expressed in Mincey and some of its antecedents, the search at issue in this case strikes me as a reasonable one. Certainly, this search by police officers summoned to the scene at the behest of the owners and licensee of record to investigate a shooting and killing is a long country mile from the writs of assistance and other intrusive indignities forced upon the colonists which provided the impetus for the Fourth Amendment. As the United States Supreme Court has upon occasion recognized, the Fourth Amendment prohibits only unreasonable searches. Carroll v. United States, 267 U.S. 132, 45 S.Ct. 280, 69 L.Ed. 543 (1925); Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 88 S.Ct. 1868, 20 L.Ed.2d 889 (1968); South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364, 372-73, 96 S.Ct. 3092, 3098-99, 23 L.Ed.2d 1000, 1007 (1976), quoting the dissenting opinion of Justice Black in Coolidge v. New Hampshire, 403 U.S. 443, 91 S.Ct. 2022, 29 L.Ed.2d 564 (1971).[1].

I can no more imagine Thomas Jefferson or James Madison acting judicially and favorably entertaining a motion to suppress a similarly found pistol in a tavern in Virginia in the 1790s than I can conceive that a nation so recently descended from Plymouth Rock and Ellis Island requires the application of such a broad and monolithic exclusionary rule to protect the right of domestic and work-place privacy. To me, the application of an exclusionary rule under circumstances like these and in absence of statutory directive represents an artificial and elitist notion of pluperfect justice, rather than the common man's quest for equal justice

1. Justice Black stated in his dissent in Coolidge that the test of the reasonableness of a search cannot be fixed by "per se rules." 403 U.S. at 509-510. Cases such as Mincey indicate to the contrary. The tendency toward formulation of per se rules, at least in some areas carried with it the potential for cutting full inquiry and justice off at the pass. See, e.g., Arizona v. Maricopa County Medical Society, _____ U.S. _____, 102 S.Ct._____, 73 L.Ed.2d 48 (1982).

under law. When one considers that the issuance of a search warrant in a case of this nature would be or at least should be immediately obtainable as a matter of right, it seems to me slavish elevation of formality over substance to hold that this inevitably discoverable [2] weapon cannot be introduced into evidence in the homicide prosecution. And even if the search is to be deemed unreasonable, the interest of society in the orderly and complete presentation of the State's case seems to me under the facts here to outweigh grossly any interests favoring suppression. I realize, however, that these considerations are foreclosed by a fair reading and application of the Mincey decision and by Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081 (1961).

Jones v. United States, 362 U.S. 257, 80 S.Ct. 725, 4 L.Ed.2d 697 (1960), allocated to the moving defendant the burden of showing "standing." While Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128, 99 S.Ct. 421, 58 L.Ed.2d 387 (1978) changed the focus of inquiry to whether the defendant had a reasonable or legitimate expectation of privacy, the burden of showing the affirmative of this entitlement logically remains with the defendant. See Rawlings v. Kentucky, 448 U.S. 98, 100 S.Ct. 2556, 65 L.Ed.2d 633 (1980); United States v. Smith, 621 F.2d 483 (2nd Cir. 1980), U.S. cert den. 449 U.S. 1086 (1981); United States v. Miller, 636 F.2d 850 (1st Cir. 1980).

Appellee did not assert that he was an owner of the business. Rather, he acknowledged that Grace Gillespie owned the business. Appellee declined to assert that he was the manager. He described himself as the "head bartender."

2. The ceiling tile was askew and a cloth material was hanging down from it.

Critically, however, the premises in question is a bar, what the English have for years called a public house, or "pub." The bar was open to the public and it appears clear from the briefs and record before us that the dropped ceiling in question was in the public barroom portion of the premises and therefore presumably within open and obvious public view.

A number of the cases involving the assertability of a protectable interest in business premises are discussed in 3 W. LaFave, Search and Seizure: A Treatise on the Fourth Amendment, § 11.3(d) (1978). Mancusi v. DeFort, 398 U.S. 364, 88 S.Ct. 2120, 20 L.Ed.2d 1154 (1968) is a leading case. The focus in business premises cases is sometimes different from that in cases involving residential premises and frequently involves an inquiry into the degree to which others and especially the public are excluded from an area where work is performed.

In State v. Williams, 84 N.J. 217, 417 A.2d 1046 (1980), the court upheld the defendant's standing to assert a Fourth Amendment violation where the defendant was the custodian of a tavern and the objectionable search took place in a storage room where he kept his tools. The court took pains to note that the area was not open to the public.

As the majority notes, that question before us is two-fold: first, whether the individual exhibits an actual or subjective expectation of privacy; and second, whether the subjective expectation of privacy is one that society is prepared to recognize as reasonable. Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735, 99 S.Ct. 2577, 61 L.Ed.2d 220 (1979).

Here, I can readily agree with the majority that the defendant exhibited a subjective expectation of privacy. I disagree, however, that the second prong of the test has been met. Had the defendant chosen the cash register or perhaps a drawer or cupboard or other receptacle behind the bar in which to place the weapon, I could well agree that his expectation of privacy was reasonable and should be honored. But on the record as it is developed here, the question is whether one has a reasonable expectation of privacy in or behind the openly visible "skin" or lining of a public barroom. On the record here, I cannot answer that question in the affirmative. It seems to me that the defendant's use of the publicly visible ceiling stands out like a sore thumb, and negatives the reasonable expectation of privacy that would attach to other parts of the premises.

United States v. Irizarry, 673 F.2d 554 (1st Cir. 1982), cited by the majority, involved a temporary residence, i.e., a motel room. The public had not right to be present in and observe the room, or its bathroom.

I agree with the majority in their disposition of the hypnosis issue, and in their conclusion that appellee's motion to suppress was timely. I disagree with and dissent from the majority's conclusion that the gun must be suppressed.

The opinion of the Arizona Court of Appeals, Division One, is reported at ____ Ariz. _____, 661 P.2d 1138 (1982). Petition for review in that case was denied by the Arizona Supreme Court in No. 5836-PR. Both are set forth in full in the petitioner's appended exhibits.

The trial court's orders of suppression regarding the hypnotized witness and illegally seized evidence are in Maricopa County Superior Court Number CR-106652 and are dated, respectively, August 14 and September 18, 1980. They are also set forth in petitioner's appended exhibits.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

Petitioner contends this Court has jurisdiction of the hypnosis issue pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3). Respondent disagrees, as is set forth more fully, infra.

Respondent agrees that, if a special or important reason were given for granting the writ of certiorari on the Fourth Amendment issue, this Court would have jurisdiction to do so pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3).

The hypnosis issue was raised by a motion in limine, in Maricopa County Superior Court Number CR-106652, dated September 4, 1979. This motion was eventually granted on August 14, 1980.

The Fourth Amendment issue was raised, in Maricopa County Superior Court Number CR-106652, by a motion to suppress dated August 14th, 1980. This motion was granted on September 15, 1980.

The petitioner's petition for review was denied by the Arizona Supreme Court on March 29, 1983, not March 30.

Respondent otherwise concurs with petitioner's statement of jurisdiction.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides:

> "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

No other federal constitutional provisions, statutes or issues are presented in this case.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Richard Francis Young, a bartender at the Leprechan Lounge in Phoenix, Arizona, was charged with first degree murder on April 25, 1979, by a Maricopa County Grand Jury. The charge stemmed from the shooting of an individual named Don Jason. On October 26, 1978, Young and Jason became embroiled in a lengthy fight at the Leprechan Lounge. During the course of the fight, Young sustained several broken ribs and a broken finger. Jason, a much larger man than Young, sustained no injuries during the fight.

The fight was broken up when the barmaid, Diana Armstrong, called the police. While she was engaged in a conversation with the police, the two men agreed to stop fighting. Almost simultaneously, the owner of the bar, Grace Gillespie, entered the scene. No one else was on the premises, as the patrons had left when the fight began.

Young, Armstrong and Gillespie walked behind the bar where Gillespie directed Young to "cash out". As Young was doing so, Jason began to come around the end of the bar, making further threatening statements and gestures against Young. At that time, Young, who had removed a weapon from behind the cash register, a nightly habit when cashing out, shot Jason. The first shot spun Jason around and the second shot caught him in the upper right hand portion of his shoulder.

Immediately upon Jason falling into the men's restroom, Young placed the gun down on the top of the bar and said, simply, "call the police." The barmaid, Armstrong, left the bar premises to do just that. Gillespie did not call the police, although she later agreed that it was appropriate to have called them. Furthermore, Gillespie was not present in the bar when the police arrived. She had left and gone to a local grocery store where she called her own attorney. She was not present when the police arrived and she was not present for any of the course of their "investigation", i.e., warrantless search.

Only two police officers testified at the suppression hearing and both were called by the defense. The first officer who arrived at the scene testified that he and one other officer arrived at approximately 9:45 p.m. They secured the scene within a matter of minutes. Phoenix Police Department detectives did not arrive until twenty to twenty-five minutes later. The detective who searched the bar testified that he did not arrive until 10:50 or 10:55 p.m. He also testified that he was aware that the scene had been secured before his arrival but, nonetheless, some time after midnight, he conducted a thorough search of the premises without a warrant and without asking for or receiving the consent of anyone.

This detective testified that he observed a portion of the ceiling askew and saw the corner of a piece of cloth hanging there. He climbed up, removed a portion of the ceiling, and searched that area, finding the gun with which Young is alleged to have committed the crime. The detective testified that the gun was not plainly visible to him and that his only purpose in going into the ceiling area was to search.

At the suppression hearing, the issue of Young's standing to object to the warrantless search was raised, briefed, thoroughly argued and decided. Gillespie, the owner, testified that Young was a silent partner and had invested thousands of dollars in the bar. She testified that he had sold his own business and invested that money into the bar. She also testified that Young had not been paid for much of his work at the bar and that they had a verbal agreement that she would eventually sell the bar to Young, when the bar got "out of the red". She further testified that Young was much more than an employee and that she and Young were the only signatories on the bar's checking account.

Young also testified at the suppression hearing. He confirmed everything that Gillespie had testified to and specified that he had contributed to the bar approximately $3,000, plus the salary he had not been paid from May of 1978 to October of 1978. He also testified that his position at the bar included ordering the stock, hiring and firing employees, running the business by working fourteen or fifteen hours a day, seven days a week, making improvements in the bar's service and physical premises, closing the bar every night and making the accounting for each day's proceeds. Young did not urge, nor did the trial court rely, in any way, on the personal friendship between Gillespie and Young in making the decision that Young indeed had standing to object to the warrantless search.

Armstrong, the barmaid, gave eight statements to the police subsequent to the incident. The last statement was given during the course of a three hour hypnosis session, during which she was surrounded by several police officers and the deputy county attorney prosecuting the case. While she was placed under the influence of hypnosis by a "specially trained police officer", the trial court found that the questions were actually asked, and the session primarily conducted by, the deputy county attorney, who had no training whatsoever in the field of hypnosis. While the petitioner maintains that hypnosis was successful in permitting Armstrong to recall details she had never previously recalled, Young has always taken the position that the hypnosis session significantly changed exculpatory statements Armstrong had previously made to the police. He has always contended, and still does, that the state tampered with a witness, by hypnosis, and improperly induced these changes.

The State of Arizona has also maintained that new information obtained from Armstrong under hypnosis was corroborated by her previous statements. However, the experts, both state and defense, agreed at the hearing on this issue that corroboration of "facts" learned during the course of hypnosis must be corroborated by an independent source, not by the same individual giving the "facts". Some of the "new information" elicited from Armstrong in this hypnosis session was information that allegedly came from Young during a conversation with Armstrong. Needless to say, there is no way that those alleged statements by Young can be corroborated by an independent source, since no one else was present when they were allegedly made. Gillespie's alleged "corroboration" of information obtained from Armstrong is corroboration of absolutely irrelevant and unrelated information. On the other hand, Gillespie and Armstrong differ significantly on important details, such as what happened with the gun immediately after the shooting. While Armstrong and Gillespie originally agreed on that fact, after the hypnosis session, Armstrong changed her story entirely.

It should be noted here that the state's own expert agreed, during the course of cross-examination at the hearing on this issue, that there was, in fact, no need to hypnotize Armstrong in this case. She had never indicated any lack of recollection or memory block. Indeed, as is pointed out above, she had given many statements favorable to Young to the police before the hypnosis session took place. The only discernible purpose for the hypnosis session was to change the statements she had been giving to suit the petitioner's theory of the case.

At the conclusion of the hearing on the hypnosis issue, the trial court found that of the many changes in Armstrong's testimony objected to, at least three of them had never been corroborated, even by Armstrong's prior statements, and that no other witness and no other physical evidence corroborated the "new facts". The trial court then went on, however, to refuse to treat the hypnosis issue as a new scientific technique pursuant to Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923), although he had been urged by the defense to do so.

The trial court was required to reconsider this issue, however, after the Arizona Supreme Court ruled against the use of hypnosis in a case entitled State v. LaMountain, 125 Ariz. 547, 611 P.2d 551 (1980). The trial court, by a different judge, then agreed the testimony obtained through hypnosis could not be used at trial.

In an opinion filed on December 28, 1982, and attached to the petitioner's brief as Exhibit A, the Arizona Court of Appeals affirmed the trial court's order suppressing all physical evidence seized at the Leprechan Lounge, except photographs, which it held to be admissible subject to the satisfaction of normal foundational prerequisites. The Court also held, pursuant to the direction of the Arizona Supreme Court, in a definitive opinion regarding hypnotized witnesses, State ex rel. Collins v. Superior Court of the State of Arizona, In and For the County of Maricopa, 132 Ariz. 180, 644 P.2d 1266, Supplemental Opinion at 1279 (1982), that Armstrong could testify to pre-hypnosis statements if the trial court, after a hearing, determined the statements had been recalled and preserved prior to the hypnosis session. Thus, Armstrong was not precluded in a per se or arbitrary manner from testifying at the trial of this matter.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

There is no jurisdiction, pursuant to 28 U.S.C.

§ 1257(3), for this Court to grant a writ of certiorari on the hypnosis issue, as that issue was decided on purely policy grounds in the Arizona courts.

No special or important reason has been offered by petitioner, nor does one exist, under Rule 17.1, for this Court to exercise its discretion and grant a writ on either the hypnosis or Fourth Amendment issues. The latter was correctly decided based upon the trial court record and this Court's decision in Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978).

ARGUMENTS

A. The Hypnosis Issue Raises No Special Or Important Reason For This Court To Grant Certiorari, Nor Would This Court Have Jurisdiction Under 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3).

Nowhere in its brief does the petitioner state that there are reasons, pursuant to the Revised Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, Rule 17.1, for this court to grant its petition for writ of certiorari on the hypnosis issue. Indeed, there are none. The Arizona Supreme Court in State ex rel. Collins v. Superior Court of the State of Arizona, In and For the County of Maricopa, supra, did not rely upon federal law, under the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution, or otherwise, to make its determination regarding the use of hypnotized witnesses in the courts of the State of Arizona. While the confrontation issue was one of the bases for the court's original opinion in that case, the court retreated significantly from that position in its supplemental opinion. Indeed, it began its analysis of the case, in the supplemental opinion, by stating the following:

> "To a large extent, the decision on use of hypnotically induced recall turns on the resolution of a single question of policy. The true issue is whether Frye [supra] should be applied to determine the basic reliability of the new technique as a prerequisite for use in the courtroom, thus leaving only foundational questions for the trial court, or whether the trial court should be left free to decide both basic reliability and foundational questions on a case-by-case basis."
> 644 P.2d at 1282.

The court made its policy decision by determining that Frye v. United States, supra, did apply to the new uses of hypnosis in criminal investigations. It made the following ruling.

> "[W]e . . . hold that a witness will not be rendered incompetent merely because he or she was hypnotized during the investigatory phase of the case. That witness will be permitted to testify with regard to those matters which he or she was able to recall and relate prior to hypnosis."
> 644 P.2d at 1295. [Emphasis in original].

The Arizona Supreme Court also set forth specific safeguards which it would require the proponent of hypnotized witnesses to follow. 644 P.2d at 1288-1292 and 1296.

No issue is presented to this Court regarding the Sixth Amendment right to confront and cross-examine witnesses. No issue is presented to this Court, even tangentially, regarding the other subsections of Rule 17.1. Thus, petitioner has presented to this Court no reason under that Rule or otherwise to grant the petition for certiorari on the hypnosis issue.

Aside and apart from the lack of reasons under Rule 17, however, it appears from the plain language of 28 U.S.C.

§ 1257(3) that no jurisdiction would lie in this Court on the hypnosis issue. Since neither of the pertinent Arizona appellate court decisions were based on any federal question, the last clause of 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3), upon which petitioner must rely, is not applicable to this case, in any way. There is no right or privilege to present questionable testimony obtained through the use of hypnosis at a trial, and the Arizona opinions do not, in fact, prevent such use in a per se manner. The Arizona opinions, furthermore, do not preclude, in any way, the use of hypnosis in criminal investigations.

The Sixth Amendment issue raised by petitioner in its brief was not decided by the Arizona courts. It is, therefore, not subject to a writ of certiorari. Illinois v. Gates, No. 81-430, decided June 8, 1983.

B. The Fourth Amendment Issue Raises No Special Or Important Reason For This Court To Grant Certiorari.

Petitioner attempts two arguments under one issue heading. First, it argues that the owner of the bar, in consenting to calling the police to the scene of the homicide, also consented to an extensive, thorough search of all of the premises. Gillespie did agree, at the suppression hearing, that it was proper to call the police to the scene. It simply does not follow, however, under the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution, or any case ever decided by this Court, that the owner of premises where a crime is committed consents to a search of the entire premises by calling the police to investigate the crime. Certainly, under such circumstances, the police may seize whatever evidence or contraband is in plain view. However, in the instant case, the trial court found, and the Court of Appeals affirmed, that the petitioner had failed in its burden to show that any of the evidence seized was in plain view.

To follow the petitioner's argument to its logical conclusion, if an assault occurred in an individual's office, for example, and the individual called the police to the scene, he would have consented to a search of his desk drawers, his file cabinets, his books, his files, etc. Such an argument finds no support, under this Court's decisions, or the decisions of any other American jurisdiction.

The second argument that the petitioner makes is that Young did not possess an expectation of privacy in the premises searched, i.e., he had no standing to object to the warrantless search. Alternatively, petitioner argues that Young had no legitimate expectation of privacy in the ceiling of the bar. However, the finding of the trial court, after a lengthy suppression hearing, affirmed by the Arizona Court of Appeals, was that Young did, indeed, have standing to object to the warrantless search. Both courts found Young had a significant proprietary interest in the bar's premises. Young was not, as the petitioner attempts to convince this Court, a mere employee of the bar. He had invested thousands of dollars of his own money and time in trying to take the bar "out of the red" and make it a profitable business. He had made improvements in its services and its physical appearance. He was there fourteen or fifteen hours a day, seven days a week. Although there was no written agreement, he was, for all practical purposes, in the process of purchasing the bar. He was a "silent partner" in the business, as Gillespie had testified. For the petitioner to argue that Young had no standing or proprietary interest in the premises is to ignore a record in this case which the Arizona Court of Appeals found "obvious". 661 P.2d, at 1141.

Thus, Mincey v. Arizona, supra, was not "mistakenly extended" in any way. It was properly applied by the Arizona Court of Appeals, after an appropriate factual determination by the trial court. The police entered and secured an alleged crime scene and then, hours later, proceeded to search the entire premises without a search warrant and without consent. That warrantless search was per se unreasonable and the Arizona Court of Appeals was required to follow the rule of Mincey v. Arizona, supra, as it did.

Finally, petitioner argues, apparently irrespective of Mincey v. Arizona, supra, that Young did not have an expectation of privacy in the ceiling tiles of the bar. This argument is made, once again, without support from the Fourth Amendment, case law or logic. If Young had standing to object to the warrantless search, the search of the premises was objectionable, no matter where the police searched. The police cannot properly search the ceiling of a residence, if they have no search warrant to search the residence. They cannot search the cabinet files in an office if they have no search warrant to search the office. If the Court were to accept the petitioner's premise, the result would gut the meaning of Mincey v. Arizona, supra, as well as numerous other cases of this Court interpreting the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution which require a search warrant except in the most limited of situations. Unlike the "burglar" example of Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128 (1978), Young was rightfully present in the bar, where he had a significant proprietary interest. His expectation of privacy under those circumstances, in all of the bar, was one that society was and is fully prepared to recognize as reasonable. The trial court in the instant case recognized it as such and so did the Arizona Court of Appeals. The latter court did not decide this Fourth Amendment issue in any way which conflicts with the applicable decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Therefore, there is no special or important reason, pursuant to Rule 17.1, for this Court to grant the Petition for Writ of Certiorari on this question.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, factual and legal, this Court should deny the Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

Respectfully submitted this 6th day of July, 1983.

MOTION TO PROCEED IN FORMA PAUPERIS

Respondent, Richard Francis Young, by and through his attorneys undersigned, hereby requests permission of this Court to proceed in this matter in forma pauperis, pursuant to the Revised Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, Rule 46. This motion is based upon the following memorandum and the attached affidavit, required by Rule 46.1 and in conformity with the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, Form 4 (adapted).

MEMORANDUM

Richard Francis Young is the respondent in the above-numbered and entitled proceeding, in which the State of Arizona, the petitioner, seeks a writ of certiorari from this Court to the Arizona Court of Appeals. The petition is without merit, as is set forth more fully in the response filed this same day.

Mr. Young has never previously sought leave to proceed in forma pauperis in any court below. However, the court should be aware that, subsequent to the dismissal of the charges against Mr. Young and throughout the state appellate procedures, Mr. Young has been indigent and unable to pay any fees or costs for legal representation. The fees for services rendered and all costs through the state appellate courts have been borne entirely by the law firm of Thomas A. Thinnes, P.A. Since this firm consists of only two attorneys, these expenses have been significant and burdensome. The firm can no longer afford to expend these valuable man-hours and costs without reimbursement, or possibility thereof, and will, undoubtedly, seek leave to withdraw as counsel on the state level once this case is eventually remanded.

The law firm has felt compelled, morally and ethically, to continue representing Mr. Young through the appellate procedures because of its familiarity with the difficult issues in this case. However, to require it to continue its representation on the federal level, and bear all of the costs of the preparation and printed reproduction of briefs, motions, etc., would be an onerous financial hardship, especially in light of the fact that Mr. Young is a respondent, not a petitioner. The petitioner, needless to say, has unlimited financial resources, a benefit few, if any, criminal defendants enjoy.

CONCLUSION AND REQUEST

Pursuant to the foregoing, and the affidavit attached hereto, respondent Young respectfully requests permission to proceed in this Court in forma pauperis.

Respectfully submitted this 6th day of July, 1983.

I, Richard F. Young, being first duly sworn, depose and say that I am the Respondent in the above-entitled case; that in support of my motion to proceed in Forma Pauperis without being required to prepay fees, costs or give security therefor, I state that because of my poverty I am unable to pay the costs of said proceeding or to give security therefor; that I believe the petitioner state is not entitled to redress.

I further swear that the responses which I have made to the questions and instructions below relating to my ability to pay the cost of responding to the petition for writ of certiorari are true.

1. Are you presently employed? No

   a. If the answer is yes, state the amount of your salary or wages per month and give the name and address of your employer. N/A

   b. If the answer is no, state the date of your last employment and the amount of the salary and wages per month which you received. January-February, 1983; $5.00 hour; Chandler Material

2. Have you received within the past twelve months any income from a business, profession or other form of self-employment, or in the form of rent payments, interest, dividends, or other source?

Yes

a. If the answer is yes, describe each source of income, and state the amount received from each during the past twelve months.

From December 1981 to December 1982 received workmen's compensation in amount of $147.00 week. Subsequent to December 1982, did odd jobs, clean up at construction sites, hourly wage of $6.00 hour average. Total income from this latter source was approximately $3,000.00.

3. Do you own any cash or checking or savings account?

No

a. If the answer is yes, state the total value of the items owned.

N/A

4. Do you own any real estate, stocks, bonds, notes, automobiles, or other valuable property (excluding ordinary household furnishings and clothing)?

Yes

a. If the answer is yes, describe the property and state its approximate value. Automobile only: 1973 Oldsmobile - $600.00.

5. List the persons who are dependent upon you for support and state your relationship to those persons. None

SUPPLEMENTAL AND REPLY BRIEF OF PETITIONER

ARGUMENT

I

ARIZONA HAS INTERPRETED THE SIXTH AND FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT RIGHT TO CONFRONTATION AND CROSS-EXAMINATION DIFFERENTLY THAN OTHER STATE COURTS OF LAST RESORT AND FEDERAL COURTS OF APPEALS.

The Arizona courts have adopted a per se rule of inadmissability of hypnosis-developed evidence based upon a perceived threat to effective cross-examination of a witness as guaranteed by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The Arizona rule of per se inadmissibility is in conflict with a growing number of decisions from other state's highest courts, as well as federal courts of appeal.

A. Arizona has incorrectly invoked the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution as proscribing hypnosis-developed testimony.

In his brief at pages 8-9, Respondent Young challenges Petitioner's characterization of the Arizona rule involving the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment to the United State's Constitution. The Arizona Supreme Court has stated quite emphatically in its supplemental opinion in the case of State ex rel. Collins v. Superior Court, 132 Ariz. 180, 206, 644 P.2d 1266, 1292:

> The effective use of cross-examination is impaired in violation of the rights guaranteed by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States.

There is absolutely no authority for the bizarre proposition that hypnosis deprives a defendant of the effective use of cross-examination any more than any other investigative or interview technique employed by law enforcement. Thus, the invocation by the Arizona Supreme Court of the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution clearly invokes 28 U.S.C.A. 1257(3), involving a federal question.

It should also be noted that Respondent Young mischaracterizes the nature of the Arizona court's rule concerning the inadmissibility of hypnosis-developed evidence. See Respondent Young's brief, at 10. The Arizona rule is one of per se inadmissibility of hypnosis-developed testimony. This is clear from the following language from the Arizona Supreme Court in the supplemental opinion in State ex rel. Collins v. Superior Court, supra, 132 Ariz. at 208-9, 644 P.2d at 1294-95:

> We reaffirm our previous holdings that hypnotically induced recall testimony is inadmissible. This is a rule of per se inadmissibility based upon what we conceive to be sound public policy in the administration of the judicial system and in the oversight of the constitutional rights of litigants (emphasis added).

B. There is a conflict between the Arizona courts' interpretation of the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution as they effect hypnosis and federal courts of appeal decisions.

Arizona's per se rule of inadmissibility of hypnosis-developed testimony is in conflict with the decisions of two federal courts of appeal who have considered the federal question. In United States v. Miller, 411 F.2d 825 (2nd Cir. 1968), the government's principle witness, Joseph Caron, was placed under hypnosis by the prosecutor in an attempt to revive his memory concerning an identification at a different trial. Because of the important nature of the identification, the Second

Circuit Court of Appeals found that there was a duty on the government to disclose the fact that Caron had been hypnotized. Although the defendant's motion for a new trial was granted because of the non-disclosure of the hypnosis, the court made a point that Caron was still a competent witness, that nothing in the court's decision should be taken to imply that the hypnosis would disqualify any future testimony from Caron. (411 F.2d at 832.)

Similarly the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has held in two recent criminal cases that hypnosis does not affect the admissibility of a witness' testimony, but rather is a matter of credibility. United State v. Awkard, 597 F.2d 667 (9th Cir. 1979), United States v. Adams, 581 F.2d 193 (9th Cir. 1978). In United States v. Awkard, supra, hypnosis was used successfully to assist a prison inmate in recalling the details surrounding the stabbing of another inmate. In this unusual case the hypnosis subject was ordered by the defendant to stab his best friend. Fearing for his own life, the subject complied, stabbing the victim superficially. Other inmates proceeded to stab the victim 13 times. Because of his fear, the hypnosis subject was unable to recall all of the inmates involved in the stabbing. Through hypnosis, he was able to overcome his personal trauma and relax, enabling him to remember details of the incident.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has extended its rule of per se admissibility concerning hypnosis-developed testimony to civil cases as well. Kline v. Ford Motor Company, 523 F.2d 1067 (9th Cir. 1975); Wyller v. Fairchild-Hiller Corp., 503 F.2d 506 (9th Cir. 1974).

The per se rules of admissibility enunciated by the Second and Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals are in direct conflict with the per se rule of inadmissibility followed by the Arizona courts.

C. Arizona's per se rule of inadmissibility of hypnosis-developed testimony based upon the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution is in direct conflict with decisions of other state's highest courts.

Arizona's per se rule of inadmissibility of hypnosis-developed testimony is in direct conflict with the decisions of other state's highest courts. The following state supreme courts have refused to adopt per se rules of inadmissibility, and permit a previously hypnotized witness to testify: People v. Smrekar, 68 Ill.App.3d 379, 385 N.E.2d 848 (1979); State v. Commeau, 438 A.2d 454 (Maine 1981); State v. Hurd, 86 N.J. 525, 432 A.2d 86 (1981) (the New Jersey Supreme Court adopts six procedural requirements as a condition precedent for the admission of hypnosis-developed testimony); State v. McQueen, 295 N.C. 96, 244 S.E. 2d 414 (1978); State v. Armstrong, 329 N.W.2d 386 (Wisc. 1983); Chapman v. State, 638 P.2d 1280 (Wyo. 1982). The following state appellate courts have approved the admissibility of hypnosis-developed testimony: Snead v. Florida, 415 So.2d 887 (Fla.App. 1982); State v. Greer, 609 S.W.2d 425 (Mo.App. 1980); State v. Beachum, 643 P.2d 246 (N.M. App. 1981) (the New Mexico Court of Appeals adopts the six procedural requirements stated in the New Jersey case of State v. Hurd, supra); State v. Peoples, 299 S.E.2d 311 (N.C.App. 1983); State v. Brom, 494 P.2d 434 (Ore.App. 1972); State v. Glebock, 616 S.W.2d 897 (Tenn.App. 1981); State v. Long, 649 P.2d 845 (Wash.App. 1982).

Several state courts have agreed with Arizona in promulgating a per se rule of inadmissibility of hypnosis-developed testimony: People v. Shirley, 31 Cal.3d 18, 181 Cal.Rptr. 226, 641 P.2d 775 (1982); Strong v. Indiana, 435 N.E.2d 969 (1982); People v. Tait, 297 N.W.2d 853 (Mich.App. 1980); State v.

Mack, 292 N.W.2d 764 (Minn. 1980); State v. Palmer, 313 N.W.2d 648 (Neb. 1981); People v. Hughes, slip opinion, New York Court of Appeals No. 232 (July 5, 1983); Commonwealth v. Nazarovitch, 436 A.2d 170 (Pa. 1981).

Petitioner submits that there exists a direct conflict between the per se rule of inadmissibility adopted by the Arizona courts, two federal courts of appeals, and many other state appellate courts, as reflected above. Petitioner would respectfully request that this Court accept its Petition for Writ of Certiorari so as to correctly interpret the effect of hypnosis upon an individual's Sixth and Fourteenth Amendment rights to confront and cross-examine witness.

II

ARIZONA HAS INTERPRETED THE FOURTH AMENDMENT DIFFERENTLY THAN THIS COURT.

The Arizona Court of Appeals opinion finding that Richard F. Young possessed a reasonable expectation of privacy in the premises searched is in direct conflict with language from a recent decision of this Court: United States v. Place, _____ U.S. _____, 33 Cr.L.Rptr. 3186 (June 20, 1983). In that case this Court stated, at 33 Cr.L.Rptr. 3187:

> For example, "objects such as weapons or contraband found in a public place may be seized by the police without a warrant," Payton v. New York, 445 U.S. 573, 587 (1980), because, under these circumstances, the risk of the item's disappearance or use for its intended purpose before a warrant may be obtained outweighs the interest in possession. See also G. M. Leasing Corp. v. United States, 429 U.S. 338, 354 (1975). (emphasis added).

In the instant matter, the alleged murder weapon, a revolver, was removed from a ceiling tile in a public area of the Leprechaun Lounge. This searched area was a place of public domain in which Young could not have reasonably expected the degree of privacy he asserted before the Arizona court.

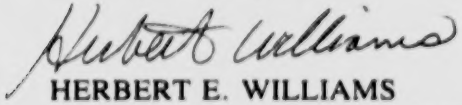
Petitioner would respectfully request that this court grant its petition for a Writ of Certiorari for the reason that the Arizona court suppressed evidence seized without a warrant in an area of public domain, contrary to this Court's interpretation of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that for the reasons outlined above and in Petitioner's Petition for Writ of Certiorari, plenary review should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

THOMAS E. COLLINS
Maricopa County Attorney



HERBERT E. WILLIAMS
Deputy Maricopa County Attorney
